Faculty	Date	Topic	Description
Akansha Singh	12th February	The Writing Process and Working with Drafts	This session discussed the various steps involved with the composition of writing—creating outlines, framing arguments, and working with drafts. In addition to this, the session also addressed the importance of parameters like coherence, presentation, grammar, and narrative clarity in writing.
Vivek Mukherjee	5th March	The Art of Effective Reading	This session discussed the practical aspect of reading for beginners of the five-year undergraduate programme. It took into account strategic and cognitive reading methods, in addition to inculcating best practices like highlighting, summarizing, and paraphrasing.
Sahana Ramesh	11th March	Approaching Internships	The five- year undergraduate programme at NALSAR is quite robust and demanding. In order to encourage students to stand tall on the academic and professional expectations of the programme, this session provided them with a brief view of how they may approach internship opportunities— choosing the right area of interest, preparing SOPs and CVs etc.
Rahul Mohanty	20th March	Referencing in Academic Writing	This session delved into the dynamics of ethical writing which is the basis of any academic writing. The session covered the need for using citations, the various citation styles, especially the two most handy ones for students of legal studies— OSCOLA and Bluebook.
Pranav Verma	25th March	Navigating NALSAR	This session focused more on the extra- curricular aspects of NALSAR and what the newly inducted students may have expected in terms of academic and extra- curricular load. The session put emphasis on how it is crucial to maintain a balance between the two so that learning does not remain

Policy of Reasonable Accommodation

In recognition of the diversity of disability, and in order to ensure equality of outcome for all persons with disabilities, the principle of reasonable accommodation whereby general rules are tweaked to accommodate the individual needs of a person with disability. This principle is applied to address the concerns of our students with disabilities but in acknowledgement of the universality of the human rights discourse we have extended the benefit of this principle to all students. We have continually asserted that be it the curriculum design, the academic regulations or the evaluation system one size does not fit all. In order to draw out the best in our students we try, as far as be, to ensure that no student falls by the wayside. Consequently, individual learning plans, strategies of social support and financial adjustments are made. We operate on the understanding that no one human is the same as the other. As a university where a number of students are admitted before they reach majority. Whilst some easily rise to the challenges of life and the responsibilities of adulthood others struggle and need support. The policy of reasonable accommodation is our effort to look at the outer edges of every rule and regulation to see what interpretative and discretionary spaces can be created so that the system continues to engage with all students. The benefit of this policy has been extended to innumerable number of students. The policy has a substantially contributed to building an empathetic administrative regime.

NALSAR is a leader in terms of accommodating slow learners and students from SC/ST and PWD categories. The University implements the policy of "Reasonable Accommodation" to ensure that the students from the under privileged sections of our population and slow learners are given extra opportunity of writing the exam. The University also adopts a liberal promotion policy wherever necessary to ensure that these students do not lose their academic year. Sometimes individual teachers are assigned to these students so that they get undivided attention and perform well in the examination conducted subsequently.
